

In Sea Isle, Growth Slows

SEA ISLE CITY — This city's construction office reported last week that the number of residential units in the city increased by 54 units during calendar year 2006.

That's a smaller increase than occurred in 2005 — when the number of residential units increased by 107.

The total number of dwelling units in the city is now 7,104.

That's "still far below the 8,337 units allowable by the Cape May County Planning Board," according to the construction office.

During 2006, 39 single homes and 46 doubles or multiple units were demolished or moved. At the same time, new construction included 19 single homes and 60 double units. During 2005, 95 single homes and 31 doubles or multiple units were demolished or moved, and new construction included 27 singles and 104 doubles.

Details of the construction activity are available by reviewing the Sea Isle City land use map and other materials at City Hall. If you're interested, call the municipal clerk's office at 263-4461 ext. 200.
